Reading 2

Not all jobs in industry have the potential to be challenging and achievement-oriented. But many more than one might expect of today's jobs do contain possibilities. One example of the striking lack of success of the present money motivation system is portrayed in the case of today's computer programmers. The computer is one of the most exciting developments of our times. Yet there is a high turnover rate and low morale among computer programmers. The case of dissatisfaction is not the pay, for these men receive high salaries and excellent fringe benefits. Rather, the problem is boredom; after the initial challenge, most companies allow their computer programming to turn into routine drudgery. This need not happen: certainly it would not be difficult to build some true motivational factors into a job with as much potential challenge as this.

A job does not have to be as exotic as computer programming to have challenge. An excellent example of how challenge can be put into a routine job is the following: one large company has a correspondence section to answer the questions of its shareholders, many of whom were not sophisticated in the intricacies of security laws. To answer questions on transfer of ownership, divided income, and the like, this company employs a number of girls who previously worked under a system engineered to insure that no wrong information was given.

While Cinderella may have valued beauty over comfort, it isn't likely that she would have punished her feet by corseting them in glass slippers. To be sure, none but by historical standards the most recent versions of the Cinderella legend make any mention whatsoever of glass slippers, and their presence in the story as most people know it is the result of a translator's error.

There are actually over 500 extant versions of the tale in scores of languages, and the earliest date back to 9th century China. The original version goes back even further and is brought to have been a nature myth in which Cinderella, representing the dawn, is persecuted by her foul-tempered sisters, representing the dark clouds of night, and is ultimately rescued by the sun-handsome prince. In all these versions the story turns on a ring or on the magic slippers, but they are made variously of gold, silver, or some other rare metal, sometimes bedecked with glomming gems- but never of glass. In the earliest French versions, Cinderella wore pantoufles en vair, "slippers of white squirrel fur". There were the versions of Cinderella, which appeared in 1697 in his anthology of fairy tales subtitled Tales of Mother Goose. By that time the word vair had long since vanished from use, and Perrault confused it with verre, pronounced the same but meaning glass.

49. The original version of Cinderella legend.....
- is translated to Chinese
  - turns on a magic glass slipper
  - goes back to 500 years ago
  - is thought to have been a nature myth
50. Perrault confused the word "vair" with "verre" because .....
- both of them mean glass
  - the word "vair" means gleaming gem
  - they can be used interchangeably in some contexts
  - the word "vair" had vanished from use in his time
